

Mahonias

- Oregon grape (Mahonia aquifolium, USDA Hardiness Zones 5-8) is a woodland shrub with dark, evergreen leaves, which are spiny and holly-like. The dense, bushy shrub can reach 6-12 feet high. Clusters of tiny, bell-shaped flowers of bright yellow flower from late winter to spring. Bluish berries mature by fall and may persist into winter.
- Charity Oregon grape (Mahonia x media 'Charity', Zones 6-9) is a tall plant, reaching 8-15 feet in height, so it needs plenty of space in the garden. It makes an excellent background plant in a shrub and perennial border.
- Creeping Oregon grape (Mahonia repens, Zones 5-8) only reaches about 1-3 feet in height and makes a good woodland ground cover.
- Soft Caress Oregon grape (Mahonia 'Soft Caress', Zones 7-9) is a relatively new hybrid mahonia on the market, and, as the name implies, the almost palm-like, evergreen foliage is soft and thornless.
